You don't like the decisions yesterday and today? You're really not going to like the next part. I mean, it's your fault, but you're not going to like it.

See, we were cool with the status quo. Yeah, we wanted abortion to go back to the states. Yeah, we wanted gun rights expanded. Yeah, we wanted our kids safe from LGBTQ indoctrination. But it wasn't enough to fight about.

We thought you were like us, that we could argue and make small gains and lose some ground but everything staying fairly level and levelheaded. But boy, were we wrong. Because we were copacetic and just going along to get along, you were pushing.

You pushed abortion. From "legal, safe, and rare in these specific instances", you pushed now to the point of post birth abortion on demand for any reason.

You pushed gun control. From "background checks and gun free zones" to now "red flag laws" which deny due process.

You pushed "the rights of gay marriage" to now the right of LGBTQ teachers telling kindergartners about their sex life.

And during all of this, you pushed disagreeing politically to calling us Nazis and justifying violence against us, justifying harming our families and our jobs.

So now, we push back. We pushed back with Trump. We pushed back with state legislators. We pushed back with school boards. And we haven't even begun to push back, kiddo.

We're going to push abortion back to the "rare" side in many states. We may give you time frame like 12 to 15 weeks, about what your beloved "other industrialized nations" give. We may not.

We're going to push back on the LGBTQ agenda. We're going to make your lives miserable when you try to get our kids to question their agenda. We're going to remove the power you think you have and put it in the hands of the parents.

You had a chance to call a truce. You had a chance to be in control and be happy. You had a chance to just leave us alone. You didn't.

You pushed and prodded and provoked. And you're threatening to commit violence now. Good luck with that.

There's a saying about the danger of making people who want to be left alone get involved. You made us get involved. So all of it, from here on out, it is squarely on you. Enjoy the whirlwind you have deservedly reaped.
